

North Carolina Journal of European Studies, 4th Edition

CALL FOR SUBMISSIONS

UNC's North Carolina Journal of European Studies, housed within the Center for European Studies, invites submissions for its fourth edition. The NCJES accepts papers and articles focused on the study of contemporary Europe by undergraduates at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Our goal is to showcase innovative research and thinking done by undergraduates, regardless of major. We encourage submissions in a wide range of disciplines, but contributions must engage European studies in some way. This can be, for example, through a critical examination of social, political, economic, or cultural issues in contemporary Europe. We especially welcome submissions from women, students of color, and members of the LGBTQ+ community.

Your submission should be a paper, no more than 20 pages (double-spaced) in length, that has previously been submitted to a professor for review or grade. Whole honors theses cannot be submitted, but individual chapters of theses may be submitted for consideration. The paper should demonstrate original thinking and/or research; research reports summarizing facts should not be submitted. There should be an analytical or creative component that distinguishes it from the sources it references. Lastly, the submission should include a bibliography.

The Journal will accept submissions (in any citation format) to until April 21, 2023. Questions about submissions may be directed to Jacob Gunderson (jacob.gunderson@unc.edu). Submissions can be uploaded at this link: https://unc.az1.qualtrics.com/jfe/form/SV_dgkG0og8NgxfgRE.

The North Carolina Journal of European Studies is sponsored by the Center for European Studies.
